Event description	A CPR (Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation) training workshop was conducted for B.Com students at SCMS School of Technology and Management. The workshop sought to provide students with life- saving skills and knowledge relevant to delivering prompt assistance in cases of cardiac emergencies. This report includes an overview of the workshop's essential aspects, objectives, activities, and outcomes.

The key objectives of the CPR training programme were to educate students about the importance of CPR in saving lives, to provide hands-on training in performing effective CPR, and to boost students' confidence in responding to emergency situations. The workshop had been designed to be interactive and practical. The course began with an overview of CPR, its importance, and the function it plays in emergency response. Trained instructors taught proper techniques for doing chest compressions and rescue breaths on mannequins. Students were then divided into smaller groups to practise CPR skills under the supervision of the instructors. This hands-on experience helped students build confidence and enhance their talents. Students were also taught the fundamentals of AED (Automated External Defibrillator) use, emphasising its necessity in particular cardiac arrest scenarios. An interactive question-and-answer session allowed students to clarify issues and expand their understanding.
